

SOCIETY

THE CHRISTMAS PROBLEM that confronts the society woman who has been in town but a few months and who has been entertained by so many of the older residents is not by any means a small one.

It is not considered good taste to remember these ladies with gifts of any kind and still the recipient of favors cannot but wish to make her many hostesses some sort of a remembrance.

A huge bouquet of roses is perhaps appreciated more than anything else and while they are not expensive they express beautiful thoughts. A Christmas card can, however, be of the same import, for any slight expression of gratitude is appreciated by a hostess. There are any number of little cards with pretty sentiments embossed upon them that are suitable Christmas remembrances.

When a woman has been entertained to any great extent by a hostess who has little children another problem confronts her. She feels that she should remember the children as well as the mother. This need not be so for almost any mother would rather her children should be favored than that she herself should be given presents.

Often times a box of candy is just as acceptable as any other gift. It is foolish for one to try to remember all of the children in a family separately. A game in which they can all participate is far more sensible and the children themselves will as a rule be more pleased.

Women are troubled by these social obligations, but most men who have been guests at dinner seem to feel that they are so greatly indebted to a hostess that they must make her some sort of an expensive present. The majority of women feel that they cannot accept pretentious gifts and would rather that a simple box of candy or a bunch of flowers had been sent in their place.

Candy can be packed in all sorts of pretty baskets and boxes that may be kept as a remembrance, and one can easily say that any woman would far rather be the recipient of a simple remembrance than an expensive present.

Presents that are usually left till the last moment are those which a young man is to give the girl—or girls—to whom he has been attentive during the year.

It is, as is usually well known, no test for a girl to accept jewelry from a man to whom she is not engaged, or one who is not a relative. Still year after year a man will give jewelry to a girl and she as a rule accepts the gift without a murmur.

A good hook is in far better judgment, or he may send her a box of writing paper or a box of flowers.

When it is time for a girl to select a gift for the man, she is often at a loss. The best way to solve this problem is to send him a Christmas card.

She sends cards to her girl friends and she should do no more for any man.

Selecting Christmas Cards.

The time has come for the selection of the Christmas cards. It has been the idea with a great many people to send these the smallest expression of Christmas thoughts to their friends alone. Then others take the opposite standpoint and send cards to those who, in their minds, will not have a large Christmas or to people away from home.

A Christmas card is appreciated by everyone, and when possible should be sent to all whom one wishes to send the season's greetings, and on this day almost everyone feels as though everyone with whom one has an acquaintance should be remembered.

There are all sorts of these cards the variety large enough to suit most any one. Some of them bear inscriptions for old friends and others come sentiment for a newly made acquaintance. In fact there seems to be most any kind of sentiment printed on the card. A great many people send Christmas gifts, Christmas cards and calling cards to one person. This may be thoughtful but it is altogether unnecessary. When one is sending a gift a tiny card with a spring of holly and a cheerful Christmas greeting seems sufficient. Then, when one is not sending any substantial gift, a Christmas card is a pleasant remembrance.

MISS LILLIAN BOYD, whose picture appears above, was one of the stars in last night's performance of "The Revolving Wedge" at the Hawaiian opera house. Miss Boyd is a talented young girl and her portrayal of the worried mother was splendid. A large share of the credit of the success of the performance was due to her good work. Miss Boyd has been in Honolulu but a short time but has become very popular among her fellow-students at the College of Hawaii. She is clever as an actress and will probably figure in the other plays that are being planned by the young collegians.
